PIONEER WASHER.
E. G. BOLTER,
AGENT FOR OREGON AND WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

THIS CELEBRATED WASHING MACHINE IS now for the first time introduced to the Oregon public. It is unrivalled for its simplicity, durability and the rapidity and ease of its action. Washing the dirtiest clothes perfectly clean in from five to ten minutes, with but slight labor, and lasting, with proper care, for ten years. The wear and tear of clothing in washing by this machine is vastly less than by any other known process of washing. It does its work by a reverse motion in forcing the water through the clothes.

It having a light cover, the steam thus assists materially in cleansing the clothes, and also avoids the inhaling of steam from hot suds.

This Machine captured the Special Premium at the California State Fair, and all that have used it pronounce it an invaluable adjunct to aid housekeepers and families and washing men and washing women.

It has been extensively introduced throughout the State of California, and receives the universal commendation of all who have used it.

THE COUNTY RIGHTS, now unsold, will be sold at a bargain if applied for soon.

For Reference, enquire at the Mansion House, and of John Wilson,

Branch Mint.

EDITOR OREGONIAN

From some quotations in your paper from the Mountaineer, I learn that Hon. George H. Williams delivered an address to the citizens of the Dalles, in which he, in the first place, explained to them his action in Congress upon the "Branch Mint" question, and that the explanation was satisfactory to the people of that place. I, I doubt not, was very proper in the Judge, and it has occurred to me that it might be equally satisfying to the people of that city to have explanation from me, touching my action upon same question, while their representative was willing to hear the truth, and is governed by reason, will be fully satisfied with my course, touching that matter, when informed of the facts as it is not likely that I shall have [illegible] some time to come, I ask the [illegible] through the medium of your [illegible] heard nothing of the statement [illegible] Williams, I shall have no occasion [illegible] tion or controvert anything he has [illegible] to tell my own story.

I felt myself the representative [illegible] whole people of Oregon, and not [illegible] the State or faction of the people [illegible] was my duty to carry out the [illegible] particular when their will was [illegible] without reference to the manner [illegible] that will. 3d. Where I had no [illegible] will, it was my duty to infer [illegible] expressed, and to act according [illegible] stand to be genuine republican [illegible] presentative is bound to carry out [illegible] constituents, regardless of his own [illegible] sonal wish in the matter.

While canvassing the State [illegible] never expressed myself as [illegible] places for the location of [illegible] questioned on the subject [illegible] believed that Portland was [illegible] for its location, for reasons [illegible] state here; but had I been [illegible] my own will in the matter [illegible] introduced a bill for its [illegible]

Preliminary Surveys for the Northern Pacific Railroad

General James Tilton, Chief Engineer of the Western Division of the North Pacific Railroad is now in this city, having nearly completed his examination of the northern passes of the Cascade mountains. One party is still exploring north of Mount Ranier; but it is the present expectation of Gen. Tilton that they will finish by the 20th inst. Six different passes have been examined, and the altitude, as ascertained by careful observations, is from 3,150 to 4,000 feet,—the lowest being that of the Snoqualmie. The object to be attained by this year's operations was to establish the fact of the accessibility of Puget Sound by a railway crossing the Cascade range. The practicability of this work has been doubted by many in the East, and it has been asserted there that any route through the Cascades would be more difficult than the route of the Central Pacific over the Sierra Nevada Mountains. No accurate observations had ever been taken to determine the altitude of the passes through the Cascade range, and they were believed at the East to be much higher and more difficult than they really are. Gen. Tilton's measurements show that the Cascades are no barrier compared with the Sierra Nevada range. The altitude reached by the Central Pacific is 7,042 feet, while actual measurements show that the northern passes of the Cascades are less than half that height. For forty miles the Central Pacific has a very great elevation, subject to snows which reach an average depth of more than twenty feet; and it is the opinion of many engineers that the road cannot be operated during the winter season. The altitude of the passes through the Cascade range being so much less, snow does not reach a depth that will impede the operation of a railroad. Any comparison between the Central Pacific and Northern routes is therefore largely in favor of the latter. The feasibility of the project for building the Northern road through the Cascade mountains is fully established, and the Company may go before Congress at the coming session asking for a subsidy to build a road. It is yet to be determined whether it is not the easiest and best way to pass the Cascade mountains to follow the course of the Columbia river;—whether it will not be a saving of time and money to go around the mountain range instead of over it. This will be considered and settled in due time. The object of General Tilton's surveys was simply to obtain data to be laid before Congress, showing that the road could be built and that the Company are in earnest about the work,—so that the aid asked from the Government might be secured.

Ignorance or Dishonesty.

The editor of the Herald, who professes to know so much about public men, very often makes amusing exhibitions of his ignorance, as well as shameful exhibitions of his dishonesty. His latest effort in this line is the publication of an article entitled "Senator Harris on Reconstruction." The original portion of the article introduces a letter recently published in the New York Herald assailing and denouncing the reconstruction acts and signed by "Ira E. Harris," whom the important Oregon editor who professes to know so much about our public men supposes to be ex-Senator Harris of New York. No person who has the smallest knowledge of Senator Harris would, after reading the letter, pronounce it genuine. It bears on its face its own refutation. In the first place the ex Senator's name is not "Ira E. Harris," but Ira Harris. No one but a simpleton would have failed to detect this imposture. In the next place, Senator Harris was in Congress when the reconstruction acts were adopted and voted for them; how absurd it is to suppose that he would now call the Congressional policy a "ruinous project," "a nefarious scheme," etc., etc. The letter is a Copperhead production throughout, dressed in Copperhead phraseology and bearing every mark of Copperhead authorship. It was written by nobody, and signed with a name resembling that of ex-Senator Harris, with a design to catch just such gudgeons as the Herald man. The person who wrote the letter will never make himself known; he is simply another McCracken, the mythical individual who wrote the slanders about Minister Motley. The letter which the Herald parades as coming from Senator Harris met the eye of that gentleman immediately after its appearance in the New York paper, whereupon he gave it the following notice:

ALBANY, Aug. 10, 1867.

To the Editor of the Albany Journal—Sir: My attention has been called to what purports to be a letter written by me—though signed "Ira E. Harris" and published in the New York Herald of this morning. No such letter has been written by me or by my authority. The fabrication imputes to me sentiments which I do not entertain. I am earnestly in favor of the Congressional policy of reconstruction. I believe it right to enfranchise the negro. Nor are the statements of a personal character attributed to me any nearer the truth. My two sons served "under the Union flag," but neither of them has fallen. Nor is it true that I have purchased a plantation in Alabama, or that I contemplate a removal thither. In short, I pronounce the publication a forgery—false, both in its statements of facts and in the opinions it ascribes to me. You will oblige me by the publication of this note. IRA HARRIS.

What starting-hole will the Herald's man find now? Will he admit his ignorance in regard to matters which every intelligent boy of twelve years is acquainted with; or will he confess his dishonesty in trying to palm off this fabricated story upon the public? He must confess to one thing or the other. Whether he acknowledges his ignorance or confesses his dishonesty, he is in either case unfit to conduct a public journal, and is in either case a disgrace to the editorial profession.

A NEW SCHOOL READER.—The San Francisco Examiner complains bitterly of 'a school book compiled by John Swett, Superintendent of Public Instruction in California. The volume contains passages and readings from the productions of "Abolition" orators, prose writers and poets, which circumstance greatly displeases and even exasperates the Examiner. E. D. Baker, T. Starr King, F. P. Tracy and others who have been residents of California, and Webster, Bancroft, Channing, Beecher, Bryant, Whittier and others, eminent in our literature, are represented in the book. The man who made such a compilation is pronounced "guilty of partisan meanness." Can't a Confederate Reader be compiled to suit people of the Examiner's ilk? There would be a considerable demand for the book in Oregon. It should contain the Confederate Declaration of Independence, A. H. Stephens' speech pronouncing negro slavery the corner stone of the new system, Beauregard's booty and beauty proclamation and President Davis' last address to the people of the Confederate States of America, urging to rise and drive back the invaders. It should be interspersed with speeches by Vallandigham and Ben. Wood, with articles written by the editors of the New York Day Book and La Crosse Democrat and with poetry by the author of "Oh, I'm a high old rebel," etc. The reverend rebel who published a ballad in an Oregon newspaper in 1861, characterizing Lee and Beauregard as the "glory of the land," could contribute something of a similar kind for the model School Reader. The obsete and classic eloquence of Ben. Hayden and Judge Strong might also adorn its pages. Some of Berish's "leaders," especially those on international law as applicable to the Confederacy, and those denouncing Grant and all others who sustained this Abolition Government, as "traitors," might be inserted with advantage. By taking this course we might hope to get a School Reader suited to the Confederates of Oregon as well as of California. By all means let us have this new Confederate Reader!

Shipping

Arrived, Oct 2—Schooner Cora, 184 days from Hamburg; bark Camden, 19 days from Honolulu. Both of these vessels suffered from severe gales

The other day, the telegraph reported that in the late election in New Orleans "there were several instances of negroes offering to vote under different names than those upon the registration papers." One of our compositors in setting this up accidentally omitted the words "of negroes," which omission gives the little mind of our newspaper neighbor no little trouble. He is sure we "doctored the telegraph" so that a fact so derogatory to the negro voters might not be known. We can assure him that we would not take so much trouble for nothing. Suppose that several negroes did offer to vote under different names than those upon the registers, have'n Democrats frequently done the same thing? It is said by those who have inquired into the matter that several Democrats voted repeatedly in the different wards of this city in the last election, giving in each instance different names, and further, it is believed that the Democrats owe their present majority in the Council to this system of voting. That negroes should occasionally do a similar thing is not surprising; but we hope that they will soon discard these Democratic practices.

Buckley, the Assistant Attorney General, and the fellow who with the aid of Conover recently cooked up the ridiculous story of the "Radical plot" against Johnson, is a contemptible adventurer who never could have received employment with any other Administration than the one that now disgraces the country. A Washington letter says of him. "Within ten years he has successively failed here as a portrait painter, the projector of a literary magazine, land office clerk, land office, attorney and defender of blockade runners, doctor, clerk in law office, "local" on the Chronicle, editor of the Intelligencer, squatter on abandoned rebel plantations in Virginia, editorial writer for a New York daily, the editor of which, on receiving his first articles, refused them, and wrote to ascertain if the man was crazy. Last of all he turned up in Stanbery's office and took a seat in the Cabinet on the day Stanton left." Stanbery is said to have been much disgusted and discomposed with the story which Binckley fabricated and put in circulation during his absence.

ELECTION OF MARSHAL.—Last evening Mr. Jacobi was elected City Marshal, vice Henry L. Hoyt, resigned. Mr. Jacobi is a man who is every way competent to discharge the duties of the office, and his election, we doubt not, will be generally satisfactory. He has always been a strenuous Republican and has uniformly voted with that party. He is a Republican still, and therefore his election, under the circumstances, is a better result than we could have anticipated.

A REMARKABLE CASE OF "FORTY AND TWO."—It is now been about twelve or thirteen years, since the happening of the circumstances hereinafter related by John Pincult, but there are doubtless some yet living who "borryed" and "40 & on Millard's mare," and who will therefore remember the particular race referred to, and how the speculatin Mister Stuart" hopled off their money in a hand-cart

Among those that came to speculate in stock and supplies was a fellow named Stuart, a man of enterprise; He bought him a switch-tail sorrel for two years old, which had a white face, And he bantered all Portland, O. T., for a three hundred yard race

That was a man fed a horse, which he thought her pretty fair, She was generally known as Millard's thousand dollar mare His hadn't no idee, he said, of doing anything so rash, But he took up Mister Stuart for two hundred dollars cash.

So every soul in Portland, O. T., went strait down to the course, And every cent we borryed we bet on Millard's horse, And there was that speculatin Stuart, with his hand upon his hip, And two men following with a tin pail full of dollars, and a champagne basket full of scrip!

Well, they measured off the ground, and the horses got a start, And they came running down right pretty, about four feet apart; And the Millard mare had it all her own way, so everybody said, Till just as they got to the end of the track, that ere sorrel shot suthin like ten feet ahead!

After we seen that, that rose a most surprisin din, And remarks, like this 'ere followed, Dog my everlastin skin," "I'll be dod derned, and dog-goned, and dog blamed by Pike," And there was such a awful howling, and swearing and dancing, that many old people said they had never seen the like

And that 'ere specul atin Stuart, he made matter worse; He packed the money in a han' cart, and didn't care a cuss; And sweetly smiling, pulled it off, as though he didn't mind the loss, And since, then we haint pail no taxes, nor bought noth in, nor sold nothin, for I do suppose that in all Portland, O T., there ain't a single red cent left

PORTLAND CASH INVESTED ON PUGET SOUND.—Some very ignorant people at a distance may suppose that our little burg is "no great shakes, no how," and that our circulating medium is still varmint skins and Cayuse war scrip; but such people will probably die without ever a suspicion that Gen Jackson is not still the President of the United States The truth is Portland has got more solid cash invested, within its own corporate limits on its own and neighboring rivers, and in various mining camps, than any town of its age and population, on this side of the river Jordan Portland capital is reaching out its finger too, and fastening upon enterprises elsewhere; it proposes to run the machine, in fact about home, and as soon as convenient, for our neighbors The Oregon Pimple Factory of the 28th ult., thus rejoices at the advent of Portland cash on Puget Sound We learn that Mr. Jacob Kuhn, of Portland, reputed to be the wealthiest man of Oregon has recently purchased one-half interest in the New World This arrangement places the finances of the P S N Company upon a firm and substantial foundation, and secures to the people of the Sound a permanent institution in that steamer We like opposition to a certain extent, as it is the life of trade, encourages travel and business and brings down rates; but the opposition of the old line has been to secure a monopoly of steamboat affairs on the Sound, and if successful to return to its old high tariff of prices, unmindful of the interests of the people or their accommodation That line might as well understand at once that this New World will not be driven from our waters but will continue to run as the favorite of the people All the prophecies and croakings of the last year against her have failed, she yet runs the first and fastest boat on these northern waters, and gets the best patronage of the people. Success to her and her owners"

TO BE TAKEN HOME.—The gentleman who was injured by the late collision of the Sierra Nevada with the cutter, Joe Lane, at Astoria, has so far recovered as to be able to be moved and he will be taken on board the Senator this morning, to be conveyed to his home at Albany He has been under the care of Dr. Mills.

POSTAL.—Mr Q A Brooks, Special Postal Agent, returned last evening from Victoria on Puget Sound, where he went on business connected with the mail service, between Portland and Victoria The Olympia Tribune thus speaks of his visit and its results "I became thoroughly satisfied and determined effort has been made by the Democratic steamboat line and its friends to get control of the mail service between this place and Victoria to the ultimate injury of the patronage of the New World Various and well cutting petitions, applications and representations have been sent to the Post office Department at Washington city for a change in the arrival and departure of the mail steamer and so much that Postal Agent Brooks was ordered over here to investigate the matter and establish such a schedule as in his judgment, would best promote the interests of the postal service on the 21st inst he passed over the line and giving the matter due consideration is satisfied that the present temporary schedule inaugurated last spring, all things considered is well adapted to the interests of the service, and consequently he will not disturb it The New World's time of sailing from this port will therefore remain as heretofore This barefaced attempt to damage a private rival company by interfering with the Government service, and thereby injure the interests of the whole community, has fell as it ought to, to the ground, and the stigma will only return to the head of its authors

WHEW!—Mr Geo H Chick, whoever he may be, writes from Dalles City, Sept 24th, thusly "Mr Editor You will please Publish nothing either pro or con about my Freighting over the Chico Route" That and nothing more No threat to intimidate no offer of reward exp lit and mandatory enough, but what does the man mean? We have not the pleasure of Mr Chick's acquaintance, in fact, we must candidly confess that we never before heard of Mr Chick, except in Dombey and Son, and we doubt if his name ever appeared, "pro or con," in this paper, in connection with either the freighting business or the Chico route We feel that we ought to have known Mr Chick There is nothing which at present mortifies us so much as to find out that we have lived ever since an early date in the nineteenth century and never before knew of the existence of Mr Chick, of Dalles City Meeting your freighting over the Chico route? Not if the court know herself—and she think she do Mention it? Not while memory holds a seat in this distracted global" If Mr Chick has such a suspicious gnawing like a canker into that implicit confidence which he ought to repose in the editorial fraternity, we implore him to banish it

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD SURVEY.—Mr Walker, one of the members of the Tilton Surveying party, arrived here on Tuesday evening, en route to the upper Columbia for the purpose of making examination of the country opposite Puget Sound and east of the Cascade mountains His special mission is to explore the deep rift in the surface of the table lands, which, at its lower end, terminates near White Bluffs and is supposed to have its beginning far to the North east, toward or in the Spokane country and which is known as the "Grand Coulee" It seems to have been at some time in the past the bed of the Columbia river, and as its course to the North east is very nearly coincident with the intended course of the Northern Pacific Railroad, it is presumed that it will offer an unobstructed route To determine this, is the principle object of Mr Walker's present trip The balance of the Tilton party are now engaged in the examination of Cody's Pass through the Cascade range

A DENIAL.—Here we are, brought up all standing again, on a Vancouver item The other day we stated, on what we believed to be unquestionable authority, that the Occidental and the Sherman B B clubs had dissolved their organizations and formed a new club called the Columbians Whereat, the President of the Sherman club, N. Gibbons, writes us the following note "Sir In this morning's issue of your paper, I noticed an article stating that the Occidental and Sherman Base Ball clubs of Vancouver have disorganized and reorganized jointly, under a new name I wish to contradict the statement; as it is not true that the Sherman's have disbanded, nor have any intentions of disbanding, although outsiders have made vigorous efforts to break up the Club."

NOT EXEMPT.—A correspondent whom we suppose to be a discharged soldier, sends us the following query "Did it ever appear in the columns of the OREGONIAN or any other paper, that honorably discharged soldiers were exempt from the Income Tax? If so, please inform me where I can obtain the paper" No such statement ever appeared, to our knowledge in the OREGONIAN and we do not remember to have ever seen it in any other paper The statement, if made any where, was incorrect Discharged soldiers are not exempt.

NEW BRIDGE.—The bridge on Tanner's creek on F street, was received from the contractors and opened to travel yesterday The people accommodated by this bridge, desire to return especial thanks to Messrs Couch & Flanders for their liberal donation and for the privilege of taking the timbers for the bridge from their land claim without charge The owners of the property on F street should now clear and grade that street to make the bridge useful to the neighborhood. AMERICAN VERTICAL PICKET FARM & CARRIAGE GATE!
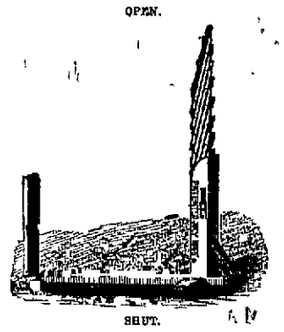
PATENTED JULY 11TH, 1865.
OPEN.


SHUT.
THIS GATE WILL BE ON EXHIBITION AT THE STATE FAIR!
When the Rights to the Counties of MARION POLK, LINN, LANE, BENTON, JACKSON JOSEPHINE, DOUGLAS UMPQUA COOS and CURRY will be offered for sale by my Agent
The advantages of this gate may be summed up in this brief statement
1st—being on a perfect balance and resting on a castor near the base, and between two posts, as may be seen in the diagram, there is no tendency to sag the posts from a perpendicular; it thus avoids the inconvenience so often experienced with the swing gate, that of dragging on the ground after a frost
2d—It opens vertically and out of the way of the snow, mud and stones, requiring no additional space when open
3d—It admits of more secure and cheaper fastening, while it is also a stronger gate than any other of the same amount of lumber
4th—It can be easily opened from a carriage without halting the horse or getting out and open the field gate without levers, can be opened easily by any one on horse back, and without leaving a team
5th—It is not only the most convenient gate, but can be made 50 per cent cheaper than any other kind now in use
ANY SMART, ENTERPRISING CARPENTER CAN MAKE FIFTEEN TO THIRTY DOLLARS PER DAY MAKING THESE GATES.

The Blue and the Gray

BY F. E. PINCH

"The women of Columbus, Miss sippi animated by nobler sentiments than are many of their sisters, have shown themselves impartial in their offerings made to the memory of the dead. They strew'd flowers alike in the graves of the Confederate and National soldiers."—New York Tribune

By the flow of the inland river
Whence the fleets of iron have fled
Where the blades of the grass grow quiver,
Asleep are the ranks of the dead:—
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day —
Under the one, the Blue,
Under the other, the Gray

These in the rubbings of glory
Those in the gloom of defeat,
All with the battle blood gory
In the dusk of eternity meet:—
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day —
Under the laurel the Blue,
Under the willow, the Gray

From the silence of sorrowful hours
The deed late mourners go,
Lovingly laden with flowers
Alike for the friend and the foe,—
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day:—
Under the roses the Blue,
Under the lilies, the Gray

So with an equal splendor,
The morning sun rays fall,
With a touch impartially tender,
On the blossoms blooming for all,
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day:—
Broidered with gold, the Blue,
Mellowed with gold, the Gray

So, when the summer calleth,
On forest and field of grain,
With an equal murmur falleth
The cooling drip of the rain,—
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day:—
Wet with the rain, the Blue,
Wet with the rain, the Gray.

Sadly, but not with upbraiding,
The generous deed was done;
In the storm of the years that are fading,
No braver battle was won:—
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day:—
Under the blossoms, the Blue,
Under the garlands, the Gray

No more shall the war-cry sever,
Or the winding rivers be red,
They banish our anger forever
When they laurel the graves of our dead!
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day:—
Love and tears for the Blue,
Tears and love for the Gray

Proll—A Mystery.

OR HOW A COWARD BECAME A HERO BY MISTAKE.

In the last will and testament of Mr. John Smith of Allsop-terrace, Halifax (the instrument may be consulted by the incredulous at the usual expense of a shilling and patience), will be found a paragraph to the following effect:

"Also, I give and bequeath to "Proll," whatever or whomsoever that may prove to be, his or her heirs or legal representatives, the sum of three thousand pounds three per cent consolidated bank annuities, desiring that when my executors, hereinafter named shall make every reasonable effort for the discovery of the aforesaid "Proll," his or her, etc; which efforts shall comprise an advertisement, thrice reposted in a leading London journal, as well as the local papers of Liverpool and Birmingham. And in default of such efforts proving successful within a year and a day, then my said executors shall expend the fund aforesaid in the purchase of some suffering tokens for the reward of any remarkable deeds of personal prowess, which shall be and occur within three years of my decease."

The singular wording of this bequest created much local interest at the time, and attracted an unusual amount of attention to the character and history of a harmless little man who might have otherwise slipped out of this bustling world as noiselessly as he had dwelt in it.

Mr. John Smith was the only son of a Halifax apothecary, who left him at his death, which did not occur until the "boy" was past forty, the possessor of an income of five hundred pounds a year. John had been destined (in his cradle) for his father's profession; but nature, in the form of a peculiarly timid and susceptible temperament, raised such objections, that the project had to be abandoned, and trout fishing in summer, and snipe shooting in winter, formed the leading occupations of the young man's life until these sports were interrupted for a season, by the decease of his respected sire, and the consequent duty of looking into his own affairs. This discharged, Mr. John returned to the snipe and trout with undiminished ardor.

The change in his habits was, indeed, so slight as to be hardly perceptible. Even the two old servants, husband and wife, who had, from time immemorial to him, formed the domestic establishment, and whom he (John) had, from kindly motives, dismissed, superannuated, with a handsome allowance, insisted that master John was not getting along nicely without them, came quietly back; dismissed, without the slightest ceremony, the provisional maid; and resumed their accustomed duties with all the vigor of youth.

John Smith has been described, by a gentleman who lived in his immediate neighborhood, as an un-educated but well-mannered little man, with a pug nose, watery eyes and a funny little flickering smile, which seemed to have been caught from the ripple of the brook over which it had been his delight to hang since boyhood. Take John Smith altogether, body and mind, he was probably the very last individual in the world to whom anything romantic or mysterious was likely to attach. And yet John Smith had a romance and a mystery; and (like a queer little parenthesis in the social annals of the world) here we chronicle the same, taking up the history about two years subsequent to the commencement of John's orphanhood.

Although Mr. Smith had never been in the habit of giving regular dinner parties, it was a frequent custom with him to invite two or three of his chief gossips to partake of a brace of Wandle trout, most of which, weight, condition, disposition and all, were (while yet in their native element) so well known to that experienced fisherman, that it must have been like diminishing the circle of his personal acquaintance to dine upon them. These, with a neck of mutton and any pretty little, tiny kickshaw, such as Judge Shallow with commendable judgment delegated to his cook, formed a light and pleasant banquet, which left the intellect clear, and temper sweet, for the rubber of three-penny whist that wound up the evening.

It was one of these festive occasions that attention was drawn to the first of a series of remarkable objects, which seemed altogether out of keeping with the modest adornments of the Smith mansion. It was a massive silver shallow, of most beautiful workmanship, displaying three compartments, on which were represented scenes from the "tauromachia," or classic bull-fights. It stood upon a blue velvet covered pedestal, beneath a glass case, which, while it permitted a full inspection of the masterly devices, on its gleaming sides, protected the exquisite object from dust or soil.

"Hallo, Jack, that's a fine thing," remarked friend number one, suddenly awakening, as it seemed to the merits of the "thing" to which he had been sitting opposite for half an hour. "I must put on my specs for this. Magnificent, by jingo! Look at it, Gripper. Toro—what? Was that your father's, Jack?"

Mr. Smith colored and hesitated

"Well, no. My father he didn't seem to care much about that sort of things, but, I say, Gripper, just you try that brown sherry. Join us, Peters, will you?"

"If I were to be guilty of the vulgarity of appraising a man's property at his own table," said Mr. Slade, the curate, "I should be disposed to affirm that the individual who became possessed of that shallow at anything under three hundred and fifty pounds, was a lucky fellow."

"Where upon earth did he get it?" said friend number three to friend number four. "I didn't give our host credit for tastes of this kind"

"Aha! There's a mystery, I take it, about that shallow," remarked the ungrateful Gripper, who, even while swallowing the brown sherry, intended to silence him, had noticed the embarrassment of the little host. "I must examine more minutely;" and he stretched out his hand towards the cup.

Smith caught him nervously by the sleeve "Not for worlds, old fellow! Let it alone, can't you?" he gasped, and sank back into his chair with a perceptible shiver. Mr. Slade silently turned the conversation.

Several months passed, yet the surprise created by Mr. Smith's purchase had not wholly subsided, when a second and yet more costly object made its appearance in the drawing-room at Allsop terrace. This time it was a gigantic vase, than which may be seen (especially in Germany) many baths of smaller dimensions. It was composed of about equal quantities of gold and silver, and was, like its predecessor, surrounded with devices of the rarest mold—the subjects in this case being suggestive of stirring incidents of the chase, or war. The rich cover was crested with the design of a matador (in solid gold) giving the finishing touch to a white Andalusian bull in a frenzy, of silver. It must have been worth, at the very lowest estimate, a thousand guineas.

Mr. Smith was as reticent and embarrassed as ever, and his friends had to fall back entirely on conjecture.

What in the world did it mean? Could the donor have been some grateful patient of the deceased apothecary? But no, for why conceal what would be so honorable to all the parties concerned? Could it be that a sudden monomaniac passion for objects of this description had possessed John Smith even to the absorption of full two years' income in a single purchase? Hardly that, for he was sane and shrewd enough in other things. And besides how would the timid nervous little gentleman have been able to summon the courage and decision required to complete such a bargain? The curiosity on the subject grew almost into pain

"Come now, you know, tell us, old fellow, where these gold and silver mines of yours are situated?" inquired the somewhat rough mannered Mr Gripper, adopting that frank tone which, indeed was fairly his own, but was intended, on this occasion, to invite a corresponding frankness

"I—I don't know what you mean," replied Mr Smith, the wan smile flickering in and out of his irresolute face, like a damp wick that will not ignite kindly

"Now, I'll tell you what, my friend," resumed Mr Gripper, setting his teeth in the truculent manner which always warned his interlocutors that he was going to say something very unpleasant indeed, "I see it all"

Mr Smith looked disturbed, but it was not the agitation of one whose secret is on the point of being discovered On the contrary, it was with some thing that seemed like curiosity, that he ejaculated with unusual emphasis

"Then wh—what the devil is this?"

"There's a woman, and a woman with money, you lucky dog, in the case"

"In what case? Where?" gasped Mr Smith, in sudden terror.

"In love with you, that's all"

Mr Smith turned deadly pale. His hair, had its constitution permitted, would have assumed an erect position

"Heaven forbid! In love with me? What ever have I done? Come, Gripper, you're always ready with your shaff, ain't you, now?" said poor little Smith, almost piteously. "Say you're a quizzing, now"

"Truth, John, is kindest," replied the inflexible Gripper "It is my painful duty to arouse you to the fact that you have wittingly or otherwise (I am not your judge), ensnared the affection of some confiding woman, with a good balance at her banker's, whose homage, in the form of gifts, you, with a baseness of which I should have believed you incapable, do not scruple to accept, intending, all the while to—to—in fact," concluded Mr. Gripper, shortly, to "throw her over"

"Over what? Who? Which? What are you talking about?" stammered poor Smith. "I wish, Gripper, you wouldn't be such a fool."

"Fool, sir?"

"And don't talk so loud, please," continued the other, looking nervously round "You don't know who might hear, and perhaps believe your shaff, for it is chaff, now, is it not? Come, be neighbors, now, and don't let us have no more of this."

"That will wholly depend upon the course I see you adopt," said Mr. Gripper, guardedly. (He was a good-natured man, and loved a joke, but his serious manner, and a gloomy look he had the gift of assuming at pleasure, frequently imposed upon his friends.) "Now, sir, unless you think fit to communicate the whole of this nefarious plot to me, I—I will not answer for what, as a matter of honor and humanity, I may not feel bound to do."

"Plot? Whose plot? Why do you talk to me as if I was a Guy Fawkes?" pleaded poor Smith, in a tone of such distress that Mr. Gripper all but abandoned his joke.

"From whence come these magnificent presents? And why, sir, do you color and hesitate when you are questioned on the matter?" retorted Gripper, sternly. "No one suspects you of having stolen them As little could you afford to become their purchaser, and where the deuce you came by the judgment to select them, if your funds permitted, is the greatest mystery of all. There is but one solution, that, sir, which I have suggested. As man to man, I demand—yes, demand—an explanation."

Mr. Gripper folded his arms, and called up a frown of extraordinary gloom.

Perhaps he overdid it a little. Perhaps a dim consciousness that Mr. Gripper had no more business with the matter than the tycoon of Japan, awoke, in the gentle bosom of poor little Smith, the slumbering man. At all events, with an energy he was never known to display before or since, he confronted his scowling friend, and, making the most of the niggard stature meted out to him, boldly replied:

"Then, sir, I refuse; and the sooner that you can make it convenient to quit my house, the better."

"Quit your house?" echoed Mr. Gripper, dismissing his frown and joke together. "Not till I have shaken hands with one of the heartiest and pluckiest fellows in the whole range of my acquaintance. By Jove, Smith, what a spitfire you are becoming."

"Do you think so?" said Mr. Smith, rubbing his hands, and at once returning to good humor "No, no."

"Couldn't you see I was only chaffing you?" asked his friend; and, shortly after, took his leave, much disgusted at not having been able to discover the secret.

Greater surprises were in store. Mr. Slade, who was rather near sighted, was entering one evening his friend's always open hall door, when he was startled by a flash of steel and gold, and a tall, menacing figure, armed with a glittering lance, seemed to be about to make a target of his breast. Mr. Slade reeled instinctively back against the door, and then perceived that his assailant was only the case of a warrior; being in fact, a magnificent suit of Milan armor—silken surcoat and all, complete—and which, being placed across a mighty block of wood, in default of a steed, represented a knight in the tilt yard in act to charge. A diadem encircling the wrought helm, denoted that this costly equipment had enclosed the limbs of some chivalrous prince in ages passed away.

The good curate was still rubbing his eyes, and marveling at such an object encountered in such a place, when Mr. Smith bustled in.

"Why, Smith, what have you got here? My good friend, this is a treasure indeed."

"Ah! I thought you'd like my Lazy Sally, and was hoping you'd call in," replied the virtuoso. "There, you needn't go too close. It looks 'all as well again at a distance," he added, nervously.

"Your Lazy Sally!" ejaculated Slade. "Why do you call it so?"

"'Cause that's its name," retorted Mr. Smith. "Look 'ere!" and he pointed to a device and legend on the shield borne by the kingly champion.

Short-sighted Mr. Slade put on his glasses and made out, for device, a bull's head and neck encircled by a broken chain; and, for motto, the well known wordplay which the marshal of a tournament gave signal to engage

"Laissez aller."

"Lazy Sally! I said so," exclaimed the lover of art. "If I wish it wasn't quite so big, though Wherever it's to stand——"

"Why, Smith, you are collecting quite a museum," remarked the curate. "You will want a custodian shortly."

"Well, I don't think it'll come to that," said Smith. "I shan't outrun the constable"

Mr Slade laughed, and observed that his friend had slightly mistaken his meaning

The curate's prophecy seemed likely to come true Other objects of art continued to arrive at uncertain intervals, until not a room in the house but could boast of at least one rich and beautiful specimen, selected by a taste as pure as the expenditure it must have involved was liberal. Mr. Smith's collection arrived at the value of, at least, fifteen thousand pounds, and it was not unusual for persons in the country, who delighted in such things, to travel considerable distances to visit the accomplished proprietor, and congratulate him on his acquisitions and the refined art knowledge which dictated their selection. The suit of Milan armor was an especial attraction, and was rendered more interesting by the circumstance that an inscription had been discovered on the breast-plate beneath the surcoat. It had, however, been purposely obliterated, and now only conveyed a suspicion that it had been in modern English, without affording any clue to its significance

Thus matters went on, until the "unmoved Fates," who spare the harmless as little as the oppressor knocked at the quiet door in Allsop terrace, and imperatively demanded the body of Mr John Smith.

The pretense was this One day, towards the closing of the trout season, when your sworn pastor grows keen and jealous of his diminishing sport, Mr Smith—while in the heat of a life and death contest with a four pound patriarch, whose time (John tell) was more than up—slipped down the bank, and into a deep pool He was at it is true, rescued by some husbandmen and fished up, not only alive, but victorious, still holding to his prize But the results were serious The poor little man caught a cold that set its fangs in his delicate chest and ultimately sucked away his life

When conscious of his approaching end, he sent for his friend Slade, and requested him to allow himself to be named co-executor with their gossip. Tom Gripper, to carry out, among other things, a purpose he had greatly at heart. It need hardly be said that his old friend consented, and, thereupon, John Smith disburdened his mind of a little romance of private life, which may possibly be held not unworthy of a sage in these records of the rolling year.

About twelve years before, and about three years subsequent to his father's death, John received a mysterious consignment, which, being opened, revealed that exquisite silver chalice which first attracted his neighbor's curiosity A card accompanied it, on which, in a beautiful female hand, were written these words

"To J. S. From the deeply grateful and admiring Proll"

And, in plain but unobtrusive characters, below the rim of the chalice was engraven

"To the intrepid Smith"

Perplexed in the extreme, John carefully laid up the chalice, hoping that the mystery would in some manner elucidate itself, and not without fear that he might be suddenly called upon to account for appropriating what was certainly intended for another of his by no means uncommon name And "Proll," who on earth was "Proll?" Was it Prell? Yes There was no mistake as to the spelling Poll might have been more natural, more familiar. No Proll it was

All doubts, however, were dispelled by the alarming receipt of the second present, the vase, accompanied by a note from "Proll," expressing her regret that Mr. Smith's modesty—a quality that always attends true courage—should have deterred him from exhibiting to his friends the former testimony of her gratitude and enthusiastic admiration, "I know you," Proll concluded, "John Smith, of 9 Allsop terrace, though you know not me And your Proll, your grateful but invisible protectress, Proll, will you remain until my dying day."

"Whatever I've done for to make anybody so grateful," said poor little Smith, his wan smile wanner than ever, "I can't understand"

Slade could not help him on this point, so, to turn the conversation, asked his friend why he had evinced so marked a disinclination to having Proll's gifts closely examined? ☞

John seemed embarrassed for a moment, then he said

"Well, it don't matter now, so here's the truth Some of my friends—not you, Slade, (affectionately pressing his hand), "have been in the 'abit of chaffing me 'cause I was a nervous sort of timid chap, and these sups and things of Proll's seemed as if they was a chaffing too Every one of them, you see's talking of my courage, my 'ardihood, and so forth. There's a motto on each On the vase was written, "To the brave, devoted Smith" On the stomach of that harmour, was "Tribute to death defying 'ardihood, in the person of the noble arted Smith" And so 'tis in all of 'em. Somehow, though I couldn't bring myself to believe that Proll was laughing at me in her sleeve, I knew it would sot those fellows off, so I scratched out the writing on the harmour's stomach, and wouldn't let no one look too close at t'other things, you see. Now, what I want you for to do is this," continued the invalid, raising himself on the pillow. "Of course this is all gammon. Proll must be a lunatic I never did nor any service. How could I as I have lived quiet here since I was born? I feel as if I'd been taking money and gimcracks all my life from Proll's family, which may want 'em There may be old Prolls, or little Prolis, or, in short, my good friend, I have made up my mind to leave a thumping legacy to Proll, at all events, and you must find her out if you can. I know you will try. And, if you can't," concluded the speaker, faintly, for he was getting wearied with his long speech, "there shall be a clause providing rewards for other brave chaps like me, you know" he smiled, "so that, perhaps, somehow, after all, the right J. S may come in for one of Proll's pretty thingumbobs."

Later the same evening, as Slade again sat beside his friend, awaiting the solicitor who was to receive instructions for the intended legacy, the curate quietly revived the subject of Proll's mysterious gifts.

"You are quite certain—think, now, John—that you have never been in a position to render some extraordinary and timely service to this Proll?"

"Never, on my word," said Mr. Smith, emphatically.

"It is very singular," resumed Mr. Slade, pondering. "Do you know—but tell me, first, has any event of real importance, such, I mean, as would remain among the best remembered incidents of an ordinary experience, ever occurred to you, that might, indirectly, perchance, connect itself with this enigma? Think."

John reflected.

"Except that—in June, 'forty two—I landed—"

"Yes?" cried his friend eagerly, observing that he paused "You landed. How? Where?"

"In the pool, below the weir," replied Mr. Smith, faintly. "I landed him—in twenty minutes—with a single gut—brown partridge fly. He weighed nine pounds and a hounce!"

Mr. Slade fell into another reverie. Suddenly he resumed:

"It occurs to me, Smith, as not a little remarkable, that every one of them mysterious offerings contains some reference to an ox."

"A box!" ejaculated the invalid. "Hox!"

"Or bull. It is an ancient sacrifice, a bull right in the arena, or even a crest or device, as in the armor instance. Now that to my mind, has a decided significance. Did you ever—say, in your reckless youth, my friend—have a misunderstanding with a bull?"

"I!" exclaimed poor Smith. "Stay, though. With a hox, I 'ad,"

"Ha!" said the curate, brightening up; 'how was that?"

"I was walking quietly down Hollow-cross lane, when there came a-bellowing behind me; and a man rushed past, crying out that a manfurioted hox had broken out, and was coming down the lane! I heard him trampling, and ran on; but there was a quickset hedge on each side, and no gate. So I made a tremendious leap, and go over."

"And were in safety?"

"Why no," replied Mr. Smith. "The haggravating beast had previously adopted a similar course, and was in the field before me. I saw his great broad forehead, heard a shriek (but whether it was my own voice or somebody else's, I'am a-feared to say,) and, being knocked down insensible, knew nothing more, till I woke in my own 'ouse, with Hannah bathing my 'ed."

"Then the matter is unaccountable as ever," remarked the curate, with a disappointed sigh.

The conversation was never renewed, for poor little Smith was beginning to sink, and two short days comprised all that was left of his inoffensive life.

More than scrupulously did the friendly executors endeavor to fulfill the duty imposed on them; but their quest of Proll was unsuccessful. They had caused two hopeless inquiry, and had begun to consult as to the best mode of carrying out the alternative measure provided by the will, when, one morning a visitor sent his card to Mr. Slade.

"Colonel Commerell."

The Colonel, who appeared about forty-five, and whose countenance was bronzed by an Indian sun, was a man of stately presence, and frank, yet gentlemanly manner.

"I am just returned, sir," he said, "from a long period of foreign service, during the latter part of which my communications with home have been somewhat irregular. My attention has only now been directed to your advertisement, addressed to "Proll,"

"God bless me! are you "Proll?" exclaimed the curate, starting from his seat.

The colonel laughed.

"Well, no," he replied. "My wife is. At her desire I am here to explain what, judging from the terms of your advertisement, has remained too long a mystery. So, poor Mr. Smith is gone! Well! Peace to the brave"

"Ehem," said Mr Slade "To be sure. Yes"

"It was an act, sir," said the colonel, enthusiastically, "worthy of the brightest age of chivalry."

"You don't say—that is, do you think so?" said Mr. Slade, cautiously.

"Indeed I do, But let me relate, in a few words, what you don't know of this matter"

("You might relate what I do, in fewer still," thought Mr Slade)

"When I was a jolly young cornet," continued his visitor, "I had the good hap to engage the affections of one who—God be praised!—is still the blessing of my home She was an only child, heiress in prospect, of very great wealth Her father looked to unite her to a member of the noble house to which he was already distinctly connected, and, having some suspicion of our attachment, hurried Rosina off, for a time, to the residence of a relative who lived in a sequestered neighborhood three miles from home Singularly enough, my regiment was ordered into this very district. Quite as remarkable was it, that my wife's father never knew of that connubance So palpable an interposition of fate was not to be neglected. We met as often as possible Show myself I dared not in the quiet walks of Copfold. So Rosina mounted a rough pony, made over to her by her aunt for excursions beyond the park limits, and flew across to meet me in the willow meadows, near Hollow cross Farm

"On one of these occasions she had tied up her pony in the little copse, and was tripping across a field, when she was alarmed by distant shouts, and turning, found herself within twenty yards of a furious bullock, which had plunged through a gap in the hedge, and was making directly for her She had given herself up for lost, when a man—a little man, too—with a desperate bound, cleared the hedge and threw himself between her and the raging animal! That prompt and generous action probably saved her life. She was preserved So was he, for the farm people were at hand, and Rosina, from behind the hedge, could perceive that, though knocked down, her champion was not gored, and was receiving all the assistance his case demanded.

"Well, sir, the proposition of friends reconciled Rosina's father to my suit. We were married, my wife receiving a magnificent dowry. One of the first uses she made of it was to commence that series of grateful offerings, which doubtless reached their destination. The mystery was tendered necessary by my wife's unwillingness to let it be known how indifferently that dear old lady at Copfold had fulfilled the office of her keeper. Hence, she adopted for name a nursery appellation, which has, you will observe, about as striking a resemblance to the real one, as such pet names usually bear Poor, gullant Smith! Well, well! The remembrance of such an act of heroism may—modest as he was—have brought with it a certain sense of satisfaction. Yet, had any one whispered so much in his dying ear, he would probably have fluttered out, "Merely my duty."

Mr. Slade coughed

"Courage, colonel, I have heard, is constitutional, and—

"I don't know about that," returned the colonel "For my own part, though I have seen a shot or two, and stood my ground no worse, I hope, than others,—if I saw a mad bull preparing to charge, hang me if I shouldn't be inclined to turn tail, provided there was cover at hand!" And the colonel looked as little like a man who would keep his word herein, as he could well look

"I am at least certain," said Mr. Slade, in a low voice "that had our departed friend been more fully sensible of the service he had rendered, he would have felt deeply grateful for having been the instrument of so providential a deliverance."

"As much as he was intrepid, oh!" said Colonel Commerell. "A beautiful combination! And now let me complete my mission. Proll, that is, Mrs Commerell, positively refuses to hear of anything to her advantage, resulting from Mr Smith's will, save the gratification of knowing that the brave fellow remembered her. Your solicitor whom I saw in my way hither, favored me with a copy of the codicil My wife will most gladly co operate with you in carrying out the admirable object of rewarding deeds of self devotion It is a thing we rarely do in England, where duty—no matter to what extreme it be carried—is popularly, though I think erroneously, believed to provide its own reward." All the Year Round
